RE: Letter to the reviewer #02445261

Dear Reviewer 02445261,

Thank you for reviewing our manuscript #20221, "How Does a Real-World Child Psychiatric Clinic Diagnose and Treat ADHD?" We revised our manuscript following your recommendations. First, we shortened the introduction from over three pages to two pages to keep the contents coherent. We also removed the statement, "Inaccurate diagnoses could put patients at risk for unnecessary or harmful treatments, and/or delay the application of the appropriate, more efficacious treatment, if and when the diagnostic errors have been detected and corrected," as we have already emphasized the importance of the accurate diagnosis of ADHD in the earlier sentences. We added an explanatory statement for the wide range of reported prevalence rates of ODD. As regards the exclusion criteria, we added a sentence to clarify that we didn't exclude any comorbid conditions in the present study. We revised the limitations to explain that the present work was designed as a retrospective study and excluded non-ADHD patients. We thoroughly revised the manuscript for a higher quality of language usage.

Sincerely,

Kumi Yuki, MD
