

February 12, 2016

Editor, World Journal of Gastroenterology
wjg@wjgnet.com

Subject: Note from BiomEditor to WJG editor regarding revision of a manuscript to be submitted (or previously submitted) to WJG

WJG manuscript reference number (as communicated by the paper's authors): Unknown

Article title (as originally sent to us): Effects of antidepressant Mirtazapine on functional dyspepsia patients with weight loss and its mechanisms

Corresponding author as indicated in the manuscript: Lin Jia
Author who corresponded with BiomEditor: Shu-man Jiang
BiomEditor internal reference number: 17833

Dear WJG editor:

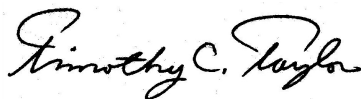

I am writing at the request of the authors ("client") of the above-noted manuscript submitted to your journal. The client indicated that WJG requests that a note from me be sent to you regarding the revision of their manuscript by our company, BiomEditor.

I confirm that we have revised the above-noted manuscript with respect to both scientific content and scientific English and returned the revised file(s) to the client. I note that our revision of the manuscript was necessarily rather in-depth.

Important: Indeed, the client may have updated their manuscript appropriately so that it will be acceptable for publication. At the time of this writing, however, the client had not asked us to review their final version of the paper that they may soon send (or have already sent) to you, and thus I cannot attest to the final content of their paper or the accuracy with which the client further revised the paper based on our recommendations.

Of course, at the client's request we would be pleased to review/finalize their updated version of the paper (i.e., their update after our initial revision), and this point was stated explicitly in a standard Email text that I included when returning our revised version of the paper to the client.

Thank you. My sincere regards,

Timothy C. Taylor, Ph.D.
Chief Science Officer