Abstract

Neurological features in celiac disease (CD) are not rare (5%-36%), but tremor is scarcely described. Subjects with CD and healthy controls completed an online survey using WHIGET tremor rating scale. 1512 subjects completed the survey, finally 674 CD patients and 290 healthy subjects were included. A higher prevalence of tremor in CD patients was observed in comparison to controls (28% vs 14%, $P < 0.001$). Frequency of family history of tremor in CD patients with and without tremor was 25% and 20% ($P = 0.2$), while in the control group it was 41% and 10% ($P < 0.001$). Controls with tremor showed a higher frequency of family history of tremor
