

Certificate of English Proofreading Service

(For Job No. 130605- 130328-4178)

(Title: The Cause of Idiopathic Sudden Sensorineural Hearing Loss -The Stress Response Theory-)

We, SEPS USAJP English Editing Service, hereby provides this certificate to prove that we have provided service to Masatsugu Masuda and Jin Kanzaki. Our English native speaking editors, who are also in the medical field, have carefully reviewed and made changes to Masuda's paper to ensure the professionalism of the paper and problem free in English.

The following is a brief review of our normal editing process.

First, our chief editor, Dana Wallace, MD, Duke North Hospital, reviews any medical related article to decide who should be the main editor for the paper. Once that is determined, the paper is then handled by that main editor (for this job, the main editor was Rebecca Klinger, MD Duke Hospital). The main editor will quickly review the paper to see if she/he has any questions. And if she/he does, then the questions will be presented to the chief editor for further clarification, either by the original author or via other means. Once all of the outstanding issues are resolved, the main editor will start the process of improving the writing quality of the paper to make sure that not only any grammar related errors are corrected, but also change the writing style to be the way a native speaker does. Finally, before a paper is returned to the original author, our chief editor will carefully review the editing by the main editor to ensure quality control. We also give author 30 days of time to clarify any questions that he/she may have for free.

With best regards,

Faithfully yours,
