

Medical ethics review report

The first affiliated hospital of Soochow University conducted a research titled "A novel risk scoring system for the prediction of pancreatic fistula after pancreaticoduodenectomy ", and this project involved in 298 clinical specimens. The ethics committee of Soochow University has reviewed this project about the medical ethics.

Basic information:

Project title: A novel risk scoring system for the prediction of pancreatic fistula after pancreaticoduodenectomy

Project leader: Dr. Jian Zhou

Contents related: collection and detection of clinical specimens, clinical data and follow-up visit concerned patients.

Review opinions:

Through the ethics committee of the first affiliated hospital of Soochow University, this project takes the security and fairness in to consideration in terms of experimental design and implement. The contents of this project have no damage and risk on concerned patients who are voluntary and informed consent. This project does its best to protect their privacy of subjects. There is no conflict of interest between contents and results of this research.

Conclusion:

The rights and interests of subjects are fully protects in this project. Agree to the project as planned.

The ethics committee of the first affiliated hospital of Soochow University
November 6, 2018

