Attached please find your edited manuscript "Epidemiology of perforating peptic ulcer: A Population-Based Retrospective Study over 40 years". As requested, we edited the manuscript according to the World Journal of Gastroenterology (Original Research: Retrospective cohort study) guidelines.

Track Changes was used in Microsoft Word. Track Changes allows you to accept or reject each edited change without retyping the whole document. All the correction locations are marked in the right margin. To turn Track Changes on select it under the tools menu.

Please do not submit your manuscript for publication without reviewing the edited changes and comments. Although we return the manuscript in edited form, the changes are editorial suggestions. Our goal is to assist you in the editing of your manuscript so it is suitable for publication. If you have any questions, please do not hesitate to ask.

+++ If you make any changes to the manuscript after we have edited it, we cannot be responsible for the quality of the English in the manuscript. Therefore, if you make any changes, please send the manuscript back to us to check the changes before submitting the manuscript for publication. The cost to edit the manuscript again will depend upon the amount of changes you have made to the manuscript. If it is a lot, we will charge you for only the changed text.
