SPECIFIC COMMENTS TO AUTHORS

Dear Editor, Thanks to the authors for this good study. I have three questions to the authors: 1. The authors reported that "Patients with CRC in their 40s showed significantly more numerous metastatic lesions". How do the authors explain this differences from other two groups. 2. The authors reported that "people in the 40s have an important socioeconomic role, so the increase in CRC patients..." People in the 30s and 50s have no socioeconomic problems, have they? I think all the people have some problems. Please, explain this difference. 3. The authors reported that "While genetic factors are the major cause of CRC in patients under the age of 40, patients in their 40s have had relatively long periods of exposure to environmental factors, so the importance of environmental factors is relatively high". However, people in the 50s have had longer periods of exposure to environmental factors than people in the 40s. I think that there is a contradiction. Please explain this condition.
