

To whom it may concern,

I hereby confirm that I, Juan Zafra Martín, co-author of “New challenges in the combination of radiotherapy and immunotherapy in NSCLC” have translated this manuscript from Spanish to English in preparation for its submission to World Journal of Clinical Oncology. I am in possession of the Cambridge Proficiency in English Certificate, which grants me a C2 level according to the Common European Framework of Reference for Languages (CEFR). This is considered essentially a native level. I have studied at the bilingual school Granada College in Spain and in the boarding school Glenalmond College in Scotland. During my medical degree at the University of Granada, I completed two “English for Medicine” courses with honors. I have also lived in the United States for several months during different periods since 2009. Over the last four years, I have translated to English several papers and abstracts for high impact journals such as Cancers and the International Journal of Radiation Oncology, Biology and Physics.

The authors have confirmed that the linguistic and stylistic edits I introduced have not altered the substantive content of their manuscript or any of the ideas they wished to express.

Yours faithfully,

A handwritten signature in black ink, appearing to read 'Juan Zafra', with a stylized flourish at the end.
