SPECIFIC COMMENTS TO AUTHORS

This article reviews the landmark clinicopathological features and imaging findings of anti-N-methyl-D-aspartate receptor-associated encephalitis, and summarizes the diagnostic criteria, treatment options, and proposed pathogenesis, which is of certain significance. However, there are a few points that need to be revised and improved, such as appropriately compressing the preamble; The content of the text can be titled and clearly layered; The article should not only give examples, but also increase your own thinking and analysis; The conclusion part should also have its own conclusions and reflections on the analysis and induction of the literature; References should be mainly from the last three years and in a uniform format. In view of the above problems, it is recommended that the review be re-examined after modification and improvement.
