Sudden cardiac death in patients with rheumatoid arthritis

Sherry Masoud, Phang Boon Lim, George D Kitas, Vasileios Panoulas

Abstract

An increased cardiovascular morbidity and mortality, including the risk of sudden cardiac death, has been shown in patients with rheumatoid arthritis. Abnormalities in autonomic markers such as heart rate variability and ventricular repolarization parameters, such as QTc interval and QT dispersion, have been associated with sudden death in patients with rheumatoid arthritis. The interplay between these parameters and inflammation that is known to exist with rheumatoid arthritis is of
