Abstract

Gastric cancer (GC), with its high incidence and mortality rate, is a highly fatal cancer and more common in East Asia especially in China. Its recurrence and metastasis is one of the main causes of its poor prognosis. Circulating tumor cells (CTCs) or other blood biomarkers that released into the circulating blood stream by tumors are supposed to play a crucial part in the

On the other hand, recent developments of nucleic acid sequence analysis allows to use minimally invasive serial blood samples to assess the mutational status and altered gene expression patterns for real time monitoring in individual patients. Here, we focus on cell-free circulating tumor-specific mutant DNA and RNA ...
