Unusual cause of lesions in the descending duodenum and liver

Zhuang-Long Xiao, Ke-Shu Xu, Yu-Hu Song

Abstract

The descending duodenum is rarely involved in Schistosoma japonicum infection. Here we report a case of acute Schistosoma infection who presented with abdominal pain, abdominal distension and irregular fever. Tumor-like lesions were observed in the descending duodenum. Simultaneously, heterogeneity in hepatic perfusion was demonstrated by dynamic CT scanning. Biopsy of the descending duodenum showed the deposition of Schistosoma eggs. Following administration of the antihelminthic drug praziquantel, the patient showed rapid clinical improvement. In conclusion,
