anti-cardiolipin (ACL) antibody, anti-Sjögren's-syndrome-related antigen A (SSA) antibody and anti-nucleosome antibody (AnuA); decreased level of complement C3 and C4). One hour later, ultrasonography of the lower limbs showed thrombus of the bilateral popliteal veins. The diagnosis of SLE and antiphospholipid syndrome was indicated. In the 54th h, the patient manifested with convulsion, dyspnea and blurred vision. Ten hours later, intrauterine death was revealed by ultrasonography. Emergent surgery consisting of inferior vena cava filter implantation and subsequent cesarean section was performed. Following glucocorticoid and anticoagulation therapy after delivery, the patient had an optimal response with improvements in symptoms and immunological markers.

CONCLUSION

Obstetricians should be aware of the symptoms and immunological examination results to distinguish pre-eclampsia and underlying SLE for optimal pregnancy outcomes.
