SPECIFIC COMMENTS TO AUTHORS

This is an article on an interesting topic on "simple" simulation models for point-of-care ultrasound (POCUS) training and is essentially a "review" article looking at available published papers. The authors background in emergency medicine focuses the article to POCUS in an emergency and critical care perspective. The review seems comprehensive but will be more beneficial to readers if there is some interpretation and analysis by the authors to help guide on what are better models and also limitations and benefits. Otherwise it is not a "review" article but a purely "collative" article. It will be useful also in some areas to have illustrations for the more complex models described rather than refer the reader to look up the references themselves.

SPECIFIC COMMENTS TO AUTHORS

Well written and up-to-date review, but has nothing to do with Clinical Cases
