The first paper was very difficult to read, as it had a lot of useless information and was quite long. This revised version has been corrected well, making it easier to read. The combination of overlap syndrome and primary pulmonary plasmacytoma (PPP) is considered to be a very rare condition, and this case report deserves publication. However, this rare combination of disease did not seem to be a coincidence, and I wanted it to be considered a little deeper. Probably, the imbalance in the immune system was the cause. This patient has pulmonary fibrosis, pulmonary emphysema, and bronchiectasis, and is it possible that Overlap Syn.→Pulmonary fibrosis→PPP occurrence? Do past PPP reports tend to develop in patients with underlying pulmonary problems like your case? Etc., and I request further enhancement of consideration.

SPECIFIC COMMENTS TO AUTHORS

Your article is very interesting as it is referred in a rare association of PPP and an overlap syndrome. This complex situation needs high level of suspicion to be diagnosed. The language is right without errors or plagiarism. It could be published.
