Obturator nerve impingement caused by the osteophyte at the sacroiliac joint: A case report

Man-Di Cai, Hua-Feng Zhang, Yong-Gang Fan, Xian-Jun Su, Lei Xia

Abstract

BACKGROUND

Cases of obturator nerve impingement (ONI) caused by osteophytes resulting from bone hyperplasia at the sacroiliac articular surface have never been reported. This study presents such a case in a patient in whom severe lower limb pain was caused by osteophyte compression of the sacroiliac joint on the obturator nerve.

Entrapment neuropathy is an underrecognized cause of pain and functional impairment caused by acute or chronic injury to peripheral nerves. Intuitively, neuropathy should manifest clinically with a predictable symptom profile specific to the affected nerve.
