LITERATURE REVIEW Budd-Chiari Syndrome (BCS) is a rare condition which was first described in 1845 by Budd and later in 1899 by Chiari. They described clinical manifestations secondary to partial or complete obstruction of the venous outflow from the small hepatic veins to the hepatic portion of the inferior vena cava (1-4).

Budd-Chiari syndrome associated with liver cirrhosis

Abstract

BACKGROUND

Budd-Chiari syndrome (BCS) is a rare heterogeneous liver disease characterized by obstruction of the hepatic venous outflow tract. The incidence of BCS is so low that it is difficult to detect in general practice and difficult to include within the scope of routine diagnosis. The clinical manifestations of BCS are not specific; hence, BCS tends to be misdiagnosed.

Primary Budd-Chiari syndrome (BCS) is a rare clinical entity characterized by a blocked hepatic venous outflow tract at various levels from the small hepatic veins to the inferior vena cava (IVC) (1,2). Hepatocellular carcinoma (HCC) is one of the major complications of BCS (3,4). The incidence of HCC associated with BCS varies between different case studies.
