Our success as educators, helpers and animators of learning and change is heavily dependent on the people we are – and the way we are experienced by others. Let us look further at these qualities – these attitudes – that facilitate learning. Exhibit 3: Carl Rogers on the core conditions for facilitating learning

Apr 25, 2017 · 7 min read. There are a great number of effective and tested ways to facilitate individual and social change processes in communities, organizations, and culture. To effectively employ some of these methods and tools requires in depth training. They become more effective if they are based on experience that is built up by applying them in more and more challenging contexts, willing to learn ...

As was noted earlier, the importance of securing leadership support in facilitating the implementation of improvement strategies cannot be overstated. This is especially the case for many strategies requiring additional resources or potentially impacting units outside the ED. Several of the UMLN II strategies required hiring additional personnel, and some of the hospitals struggled with recruitment and hiring freezes. Due to the economic recession and overall financial pressures, hiring additional staff was not a...

The Faciliti

At heart facilitation is about the process of helping people to explore, learn and change. But what does facilitating involve? To start I want to take a popular definition of group facilitation by Roger Schwarz. Group facilitation is a process in which a person whose selection is acceptable to all members of the group, who is substantively neutral, and who has no substantive decision-making authority diagnoses and intervenes to help a group improve how it identifies and solves problems and makes decisions, to incre...
