Small bowel obstruction caused by jejunal secondary tumor from renal cell carcinoma: a case report

Bai GC et al. Jejunal secondary tumor from RCC

Abstract

BACKGROUND

Jejunal secondary tumor from renal cell carcinoma is extremely rare in clinical practice and is easily missed and misdiagnosed because of the low incidence and atypical symptoms.

CASE SUMMARY

A 38-year-old male patient was diagnosed pathologically with left renal cell carcinoma

after radical nephrectomy in 2012. The patient then suffered multiple lung metastases

Small bowel obstruction caused by secondary tumors

<https://pubmed.ncbi.nlm.nih.gov/16905310>

Small bowel obstruction in an oncology patient is a common and serious medical problem which is associated with diagnostic as well as therapeutic dilemmas. While the condition is most commonly caused by postoperative adhesions and peritoneal carcinomatosis, other causes have been reported [Cormier WJ, Gaffey TA, Welch JM, et al. Linitis plastica caused by metastatic lobular carcinoma of the ...
