The article analyzes the clinical case of the Madelung's disease in a 33-year-old man with 60-year-old man complaining of edema of lower limbs. Authors are described a patient who presented with acute exacerbation of chronic alcoholic liver disease and acute kidney injury. To solve this problem the author has chosen adequate research way (laboratory and imaging examinations). The obtained results are discussed in-depth literature analysis. Authors were shown that must pay attention to monitoring liver function indices and need to monitor the renal function to find out whether there are complications of kidney disease. The article is devoted to the subjects, has practical significance and is illustrated with 4 figures and 1 table. I recommend the article for publication
