SPECIFIC COMMENTS TO AUTHORS

Sun et al. reported a rare case of follicular lymphoma with cardiac involvement. This case report is instructive to the relevant field. Presentation is proper and English is easy to read. I think this manuscript would be acceptable in the present form.

SPECIFIC COMMENTS TO AUTHORS

Sun et al. present a rarely diagnosed in vivo localisation of follicular lymphoma, namely cardiac involvement of the disease. The interest regarding the case is mainly related to the awareness level regarding cardiac complications associated to follicular lymphomas. However, there was no definitive histological diagnosis of cardiac lymphoid infiltration to support the diagnosis. Eventhough the clinical scenario aims to this definitive diagnosis, the lack o pathological sample should be added at least as a limitation in the discussion section. Moreover, throughout the manuscript there are a lot of English spelling and grammar errors, so I recommend evaluation from a native English speaker for refinement. Another identified issue would be the case report subtitles, which I usually do not recommend, but rather a continuous flow of the case would be more appropriate. In the end this is a journal paper, not a patient hospital record.
