SPECIFIC COMMENTS TO AUTHORS

Migraine is a prevalent disease characterized by headaches that are often severe and throbbing and accompanied by associated symptoms, such as photophobia, phonophobia, nausea, vomiting, vertigo, cutaneous allodynia, and cognitive dysfunction. Development of new agents that combine good efficacy and safety may be helpful for treatment of migraine. Traditional Chinese medicine is a good choice, because migraine patients have tolerance and limited adverse reactions to supplements and substitute drugs. In this study, the authors systematically integrate these clinical trials to evaluate the efficacy and safety of a Chinese medicine alone in the treatment of migraine and provide an evidence base for further clinical application and research. The study is overall well performed, and the results are interesting. Minor comments: 1. Please take attention about the abbreviations. 2. References should be edited carefully according to the journal's guideline.
