SPECIFIC COMMENTS TO AUTHORS

Dear Authors, you report a quite interesting case of ascending colon cancer and situs inversus. You describe the importance of surgeon position and I agree with you but when we perform a right hemicolectomy the surgeon position is on the left side of the patient and not between legs. We find more confident and comfortable this position. In your case we maybe we would have performed the procedure on the right side of the patient. What do you think about?

SPECIFIC COMMENTS TO AUTHORS

This manuscript is well written, and it describes the successful laparoscopic hemicolectomy and radical lymphadenectomy of a SIT patient with ascending colon cancer. Laparoscopic surgery of patients with SIT is very difficult, therefore, this report is necessary for surgeon. Of course, the authors need to supply the follow-up data for this paper.
