Abstract

Complications of cecal retroflexion have not previously been reported to occur. We report a case of contained colonic perforation secondary to using cecal retroflexion technique to examine the colon, and conducted a retrospective, cross sectional study of patients exposed vs. unexposed to cecal retroflexion during routine colonoscopy performed by a single endoscopist over a 5-year period. 30-day complication rates (estimated per 1,000 procedures) and adenoma detection rates (ADRs) were compared
