SPECIFIC COMMENTS TO AUTHORS

This original case report describe a small bowel obstruction caused by jejunal secondary tumor from renal cell carcinoma. This is a very uncommon clinical event, so the scientific value of this paper is congruous to the World Journal of Clinical Cases Manuscript. As the authors concluded, this article is written to remind urologists and pathologists of the potential for small intestinal secondary tumours when a patient with a history of renal cell carcinoma seeks treatment for digestive symptoms.

SPECIFIC COMMENTS TO AUTHORS

The author presented a rare case of a small bowel obstruction caused by a jejunal secondary tumour from RCC which could benefit for. Although he manuscript was well-organized and well-written, novelty remains the foremost important aspect for a case report. As the author said in the discussion part, there has been a report on the small intestinal metastases secondary to renal cancer which included 15 patients with different symptoms, the author should put more emphasis on introducing novel aspects of the patient evaluation, investigation, treatment, or any other aspect related to patient care.
