Emerging concepts in alcoholic hepatitis

Phoenix Fung, Nikolaos Pyrsopoulos

Abstract

Severe alcoholic hepatitis is implicated as a costly, worldwide public health issue with high morbidity and mortality. Abstinence from alcohol is the recommended first-line treatment. Although corticosteroids remain as the current evidence based option for selected patients with discriminant function ≥ 32 , improvement of short-term survival rate may be the only benefit. Identification of individuals with risk factors for the development of severe alcoholic hepatitis may provide insight to the diverse clinical spectrum and prognosis of the disease. The understanding of the complex
