Periodontal surgery in a stage II Parkinson disease patient - Report of a case with special considerations

Ritika Arora, RK Sharma, Shikha Tewari, Himanshu Kapoor

Abstract

Parkinson disease (PD) is an idiopathic progressive neurological disorder characterised by resting tremor, restrictions in mobility and muscular rigidity that can lead to problems in maintaining oral health. Here we report a case where crown lengthening surgeries (CLS) were successfully performed in a PD patient for complete oral rehabilitation. Certain special considerations that are required before and during periodontal surgery in such patients are also elucidated. Often dentists
