- 9 Abstract
- 3 Patient specific instrumentation (PSI) in total knee arthroplasty (TKA) promises
- 11 faster operation time (by using less instruments and individual cutting jigs), less
- 12 blood loss, faster rehabilitation, better implant sizing and accuracy, superior overall
- 13 outcome, and at the end - less costs. However, as evident for every new
- 14 development, its superiority remains to be proven over the conventional systems.
- 15 Whilst dissatisfaction is reported to be eminent in up to 30 percent of patients having
- 16 undergone conventional TKA, it is unclear whether PSI can address these patients
