Pedunculated colonic lipoma prolapsing through the anus

Omar M Ghanem, Julia Slater, Puneet Singh, Richard F Heitmiller, Josph D DiRocco

Abstract

Colorectal lipomas are the second most common benign tumors of the colon. These masses are typically incidental findings with over 94% being asymptomatic. Symptoms -classically abdominal pain, bleeding per rectum and alterations in bowel habits- may arise when lipomas become larger than 2 cm in size. Colonic lipomas are most often noted incidentally by colonoscopy. They may also be identified by abdominal imaging such as computed tomography (CT) or magnetic resonance imaging (MRI). We report a case of a sixty-one year old male who presented to our emergency room with a 6.7cm x
