Esthesioneuroblastoma: Multimodal management and review of literature

Ritesh Kumar

Abstract

Esthesioneuroblastoma (ENB) is a rare malignant neoplasm arising from the olfactory neuroepithelium. ENB constitutes only 3% of all malignant intranasal neoplasm. Because of the rarity, the number of patients of ENB treated in individual departments is small. Most of these patients presents in locally advanced stages and require multimodality treatment in form of surgery, chemotherapy and radiotherapy. Multimodality approach with a risk-adapted strategy is required to achieve good control rates while minimizing treatment related toxicity.

KEY WORDS - Esthesioneuroblastoma, Surgery, Radiotherapy, ChemotherapyCore tip:

This article is a comprehensive review of literature of a rare and aggressive neoplasm. This article outlines the various newer details of diagnosis, staging and treatment aspects of esthesioneuroblastoma (ENB). The importance of multimodality approach in management of ENB is reviewed in detail.
