Hookworm Infection Caused Acute Intestinal Bleeding ...

<https://www.ncbi.nlm.nih.gov/pubmed/28877573>

Hookworm infections are rare causes of acute gastrointestinal bleeding. We report a middle aged man with primary nephrotic syndrome and pulmonary embolism. During the treatment with steroids and anticoagulants, the patient presented acute massive hemorrhage of the gastrointestinal tract. The results of gastroscopy showed red worms in the duodenum.

Dec 05, 2012 · In the last 10 years, rituximab was found to improve the clinical outcome of patients with B cell malignancies. In this case, the severe gastrointestinal bleeding was caused by low-dose chemotherapy, which was dramatically improved by rituximab monotherapy. Therefore, we discussed the treatment options with a brief review of the literature.
