Abstract

An intra-abdominal pseudotumor ¹is a rare complication of hemophilia. Surgical treatment ¹is associated with high morbidity and mortality rates and reported cases are scarce. We present a 66 year-old Caucasian male suffering from severe hemophilia type A treated for 10 years with Factor VIII. Major complications from the disease were chronic hepatitis B and C, cerebral hemorrhage and disabling arthropathy. Twenty-three years ago, retro-peritoneal bleeding led to the development of a large intra-abdominal pseudotumor, which was followed-up clinically due to the high surgical risk and the lack of clinical indication. The patient presented to the emergency department with severe sepsis and umbilical discharge
