Unreported complication of Bravo pH capsule dislodged into the pyriform sinus

Akash Kumar, Elisabeth Kramer, Sita Chokhavatia

Abstract

We report an unexpected, previously unreported complication of Bravo pH capsule dislodgement. During Bravo pH testing of a 44 year-old man with gastroesophageal reflux disease, we were unable to endoscopically visualize the capsule attached to the esophageal wall after deployment. After multiple attempts to detect the capsule, it was visualized in the left pyriform sinus. As there was significant risk for pulmonary dislodgement, ENT and pulmonary physicians were immediately consulted to review options for safe removal.

Unintentional ENT complications related to the capsule with a foreign body sensation.
