Abstract

Introduction. The main aim of this report is to identify and interrogate current evidence and formulate recommendations for sedation in pediatric gastrointestinal endoscopy by non-anesthesiologists.

Methods. The databases Medline, Cochrane, and Embase were searched for keywords "endoscopy, gastrointestinal", "endoscopy, digestive system" AND "sedation", "conscious sedation", "moderate sedation", "deep sedation", and "hypnotics and sedatives" for publications in English restricted to the pediatric age group. Additional searches for gastrointestinal endoscopy sedation in pediatrics and sedation guidelines by non-anesthesiologists for the adult population were performed. Additional publications were directly examined when results of the conducted search were not conclusive.

Results. From the available studies three sedation protocols are highlighted. Propofol, which seems to offer the best balance between efficacy and safety is rarely used by non-anesthesiologists mainly because of legal restrictions. Ketamine and a
