Pseudolymphoma (reactive lymphoid hyperplasia) of the liver: A clinical challenge

Yong Kyong Kwon, Reena C Jha, Kambiz Etesami, Thomas M Fishbein, Metin Ozdemirli, Chirag S Desai

Abstract:

Reactive lymphoid hyperplasia (RLH), also known as pseudolymphoma or nodular lymphoid lesion of the liver is an extremely rare condition, and only 51 hepatic RLH cases have been described in the literature since the first case was described in 1981. The majority of these cases were asymptomatic and incidentally found through radiological imaging. The precise etiology of hepatic RLH is still unknown, but relative high prevalence of autoimmune disorder in these cases suggests an immune-based liver disorder. Imaging features of hepatic RLH often suggest malignant lesions such as
