Abstract

In this case study 16yr/ male having swelling over anterior aspect of proximal 1/3 tibia since one year which was peanut in size initially and progressively increased to present size. Patient had undergone FNAC twice during this period and reported as spindle cell sarcoma.

MPNST is a malignancy of the connective tissue surrounding the nerves. Previously MPNST is also called as neurofibrosarcoma, malignant schwannoma; neurogenic sarcoma. We are reporting this case for its rarity and peculiar mode of presentation. FNAC/Core biopsy can be used as an effective diagnostic tool to hit the correct pathological diagnosis.

Keywords-

Tibial MPNST, FNAC, Histopathology, Treatment

Core tip-

In cases of MPNST of tibia Fine Needle Aspiration Cytology (FNAC)/core biopsy can be used as an effective diagnostic tool to hit the correct pathological diagnosis. In such cases enblock resection is the treatment of choice. Adjuvant radiotherapy/chemotherapy plays
