Care of survivors of gynecologic cancers

Alexandra J Walker, Isidore D Benrubi, Kristy K Ward

Abstract

The number of cancer survivors is increasing and most healthcare providers will manage patients who have completed therapy for malignancy at some point. The care of survivors of gynecologic malignancies may seem daunting in a busy general gynecology practice. This paper intends to review the literature and suggest management of these women for the general gynecologist.

Key words: survivorship; gynecologic cancer; cancer surveillance; cancer survivor; female reproductive malignancy

Introduction

Advances in cancer diagnosis and treatment have led to a steady increase in the number of cancer survivors, a population with unique physical, psychosocial and economic needs. In recent decades, coordinated efforts have focused on understanding this population and on enhancing the length and quality of life of
