Splenunculi mimicking metastases in a patient with locally advanced prostate cancer

Darren Foreman, Sophie A Plagakis

Abstract

A 61 year old man with locally advanced prostate cancer was found to have multiple solid intra-abdominal solid lesions during staging investigations. While some were in the pelvis, they were not located in the common landing sites for prostate cancer metastases, and his PSA was not significantly elevated to suggest a high burden of metastatic disease. He reported a history of a blunt abdominal trauma due to a
