Abstract

Helicobacter pylori (H. pylori) infection has often no clinical signs and is one of the most common bacterial infections. All infected subjects have histology of active chronic gastritis. In some cases patients develop peptic ulcer and minority of them develop gastric cancer. Gastric cancer is multifactorial disease, thus various progressions of H. pylori infection and disease are dependent on the host genetic factors, the characteristics of the individual's immune response, environmental factors, and different bacterial virulence factors of the individual bacterial strains.
