How does a real-world child psychiatric clinic diagnose and treat attention deficit hyperactivity disorder?

Kumi Yuki, Jyoti Bhagia, David Mrazek, Peter S Jensen

Abstract

AIM: To investigate child and adolescent psychiatrists' (CAPs) attention deficit hyperactivity disorder (ADHD) and oppositional defiant disorder (ODD) diagnoses and treatments in real-world clinical practice.

METHODS: The medical records of 69 ADHD children (mean age = 9.5 years), newly referred to the ADHD clinic, were reviewed for their scores of parent- and teacher- reported Vanderbilt ADHD Diagnostic Rating Scales (VADRSs), CAPs' diagnoses of ADHD and ODD, and CAPs' treatment recommendations. Among 63 ADHD subjects who completed both parent and teacher VADRSs, we examined the agreement of the parent and teacher VADRSs. We also examined the concurrent validity of CAP's ODD diagnoses against the results from the VADRSs. In addition, we compared CAPs' treatment recommendations against
