Abstract

BACKGROUND

Individuals with benign kidney disorders undergoing nephrectomy have three possibilities. Autotransplantation, with a certain risk of complications, but without a clear benefit for them; discarding the kidney; or living kidney donation.

AIM

To investigate if patients with benign kidney disorders and a medical indication for nephrectomy are suitable as unspecified live kidney donors.

Living donor kidney transplantation (LDKT) is the preferred treatment for patients with end-stage renal disease and unspecified living kidney donation is morally justified. Despite the excellent outcomes of LDKT, unspecified kidney donation (UKD) is limited to a minority of European countries due to legal constraints and moral objections.

The Human Tissue Act 2004 1 included regulatory oversight for living kidney donation, and thus, nondirected kidney donation was allowed for the first time when it came into force. Nondirected kidney donor (NKD) organs, also known as altruistic, good Samaritan, anonymous, or unspecified, donor kidneys, are donated to a nondirected recipient without an emotional link. 2 The number ...

All kidney donor candidates undergo a 3-D CT scan to determine which kidney is the most suitable for donation. Female patients need a gynecological exam and a pregnancy test. A mammogram is necessary for women older than 39. Male patients older than 39 need to have a blood test called a prostate-specific antigen (PSA) test to check for prostate ...
