offer diverse, substantial, very efficient, and easily accessible accredited educational opportunities. These can save time and cost compared to the more traditional modes of knowledge acquisition. In this review, we provide a guide of web-based IBD-related educational resources for practitioners to allow acquisition or maintenance of certified skills and knowledge in IBD management. This review article by Zezos et al. is Web-Based learning resource in IBD that explore the Internet using PubMed and Startpage (Google), for web-based IBD-related educational resources aiming to provide a guide for those interested in obtaining certified knowledge in this subject. I find this article focused with important information tips to young physicians attending IBD patients, and especially to the healthcare providers in the developing nations where IBD has become an emergence disease due to lack of knowledge among the staff. I would suggest one additional website to be included which is from "The American Society of Colon and Rectal Surgeons (ASCRS)". ASCRS Education, available from <https://www.fascrs.org/search/site/inflammatory%20bowel%20diseases>
