SPECIFIC COMMENTS TO AUTHORS

Acute pancreatitis (AP) has varying severity, and moderately severe and severe AP has prolonged hospitalization and requires multiple interventions. These patients are at risk of malnutrition. There is no proven pharmacotherapy for AP, however, apart from fluid resuscitation, analgesics, and organ support, nutrition plays an important role in the management of AP. Oral or enteral nutrition is the preferred route of nutrition in AP, however, in a subset of patients, parenteral nutrition is required. Enteral nutrition has various physiological benefits and decreases the risk of infection, interventions, and mortality. There is no definite proven role of probiotics, glutamine supplementation, anti-oxidants, and pancreatic enzyme replacement therapy in patients with acute pancreatitis. In General: it's a good paper and the subject of the manuscript is applicable and useful. Title: the title properly explains the purpose and objective of the article Abstract: abstract contains an appropriate summary for the article, the language used in the abstract is easy to read and understand, and there are no suggestions for improvement. Introduction: authors do provide adequate background on the topic and reason for this article and describe what the authors hoped to achieve. Results: the results are presented clearly, the authors provide accurate research results, and there is sufficient evidence for each result. Conclusion: in general: Good and the research provides sample data for the authors to make their conclusion. Grammar: There are a lot of grammatical errors. #### SPECIFIC COMMENTS TO AUTHORS

The manuscript's scientific quality and language is good. It deals with the actual clinical issues of nutritional support of patients with different forms of acute pancreatitis and its complications. The manuscript clearly describes benefits, indications and contraindications of different types of enteral, and parenteral routes of nutrition. It deserves to be published.
