Name of Journal: World Journal of Clinical Cases

ESPS Manuscript NO: 27865

Manuscript Type: Letter to the Editor

As requested the manuscript was revised. All the changes made to the Manuscript are outlined by shaded yellow.

1- Reviewers' Comments to the Author: "The topic of the letter is of clinical importance. I suggest to accept it as it is".

Amendment: The authors thank the commentary and believe this is a fair article for this journal.

2- Reviewers' Comments to the Author: "Interesting paper suitable for publication after some minor revision: Language will need some polishing".

Amendment: As requested, some grammar corrections were performed. All the changes made were outlined by shaded yellow.

3- Reviewers' Comments to the Author: "In this manuscript, Macedo et al introduced the campaign to disseminate hepatitis knowledge for hepatitis control in Portugal. This is interesting. Yet minor concerns existed and should be addressed: 1. Language is acceptable but small defects existed and can be polished and improved further. 2. A sketch roadmap of the campaign adopted for the control of hepatitis B and C in Portugal will help the reader understand this paper better.”.

Amendment: Regarding the first point raised by the reviewer, as referred in the topic above some grammar corrections were performed. Concerning the second point, we do not have a sketch roadmap of the campaign. With this manuscript we intend to outline the efforts made over the years by all Hepatologists in order to raise awareness of the general public for liver disease. Some campaigns, like the Liver on Tour project (devoted to increase the public awareness on liver health and liver diseases), were launched throughout the country and consisted of a road show, travelling through and reaching all 18 district capitals of Portugal.

All named authors, contributing directly to the work described, have read the revised manuscript and approved submission.

Yours sincerely,

Marco Silva, M.D.
