First of all, thank you for your careful guidance of this article. Revision has been made according to the suggestions of the reviewer:

The case in this study is very rare, and the treatment of this case is successful. The figures should be moved to the end of the text. The conclusion section is missing in the main text. The manuscript should be updated according to the guideline of the case report of the journal. Reference list is OK.

Reviewer: 02854801

This case report is very interesting. The case of extremely premature infants who accidentally entered the left upper extremity artery during peripheral puncture of the central venous catheter was very rare. Comments: 1. The title should be revised. "picc" should be changed to "PICC", and I suggest to change the title to "Arterial embolism caused by picc in very premature infants: A case report and literature review". 2. "1.6" is the follow-up, the title should included. 3. The manuscript required a minor language editing.

Thank you for your advice.

After receiving the comments, we read the article carefully and found some small loopholes in the language of the article and made modifications. I added conclusion in the main text. Edited and moved the figures to the end of the article. I change the title to "Arterial embolism caused by picc in very premature infants: A case report and literature review". I updated manuscript according to the guideline of the case report of the journal. And I edited "1.6" title.

According to the suggestion, we changed the relavant description.

Thank you again for publishing our manuscript in the World Journal of Clinical Cases.

Sincerely Yours,

Yi-Fei Huang
