

The manuscript is well written. Kindly elucidate on the type of ethical approval taken/required for the cadaveric study. The findings have been compared to existing literature in a refined manner. The author has talked about the limitations as well. However, it would be nice if there was a mention of the future studies that can be carried out.

AUTHORS: We have added the following paragraph at the end of the Discussion

Further studies will be needed to advance in the understanding of the intricacies of these rare but devastating injuries. The creation of a validated cadaveric model would indeed enable us to compare the biomechanical advantages of one technique over another, as well as to test dorsal spanning plating versus other options such as external fixation or the use of Kirschner wires. Ultimately, in vivo studies will be necessary to evaluate the outcome in a real scenario.
